Here is a simple replace: string newUrl = myUrl.Replace("%", ""); Q: wget without file name with shell script I'm trying to use wget to download a large file from a web server, but I want it to happen "naturally" (that is, I want the shell to look for a file named "myfile" (or whatever the filename of the file I'm trying to download) on the server, instead of supplying a file name in the command line. (The reason is that this will be run as an automated script from shell, and specifying a file name on the command line doesn't look like the most elegant way to do it.) So, in the following minimal example, I want this: wget -O out.txt ... to be equivalent to this: wget -O /tmp/out.txt I also want to be able to use curl (or any other web browser) instead of wget, if at all possible, as using wget in a shell script seems like such a "dirty" way to do things. So, here's what I've come up with: #!/bin/bash file=`wget -O /tmp/out.txt` wget "$file" -O /tmp/out.txt That seems like it should work. However, when I run this, I get the error wget http d0c515b9f4
