Chocolate Weather app from my colleague Lukas Pollmeier. Lukas sent me a beta version to test and I liked it a lot! So I'm pretty excited to announce the official release. There are some additional features and some bugfixes. Features Swipeable maps and weather icons. Live weather information with trending topics Sunrise / Sunset times Sunset temperature Humidity It has the new design of Android 4.0. The sliding animations are a bit different than in the beta version, but I really like it! Bugfixes Weather forecast icons at the bottom were crashing Now the way “-10°” and “10°” are shown, it makes a difference Now the weather info cards are shown every time you open the app Now in the settings you can choose the app icon instead of the default Google+ icon Last two bugs were crashing when you search for the weather. Chocolate Weather is now available in the Market. If you have any feedback, please tell me! I'm really excited about this app. I created some new widgets for it. I hope you like them! The first is a widget to show the temperature. You can choose to show the temperature in Fahrenheit or Celsius. It also shows the sunrise and sunset times. The second one is a widget to show the current weather. You can choose to show the hourly forecast, or the precipitation percentage or the precipitation type

Edgar is a free keyboard lock screen replacement for Windows. It works for the lock screen, the screensaver, or both. It shows your desktop, your clock, and lets you configure the various input devices. Use Edgar as your desktop and lock screen with just the keyboard! You can quickly change devices and themes, too! Edgar is written in C++ and supports many languages such as .NET, Java, and others. It is compiled as a 32-bit application for Windows 95/98/Me/NT/2000/XP/Vista/7/8. It does not require administrative rights and does not show any desktop icons. This is a very simple application with no unnecessary options. The only options that are available in the default installation are: Changing the keyboard to the US English, US QWERTY, and French keyboard, changing the desktop theme, changing the time and date format, adding an option to input the system clock in 24-hour or 12-hour format, and changing the screensaver delay. To change any options, you first need to go to Options, which can be done by typing Edgar Options in the program's main window. This will open the Options dialog. Next, press the Add button to the right of Option (the “+” button) to add an option. Then, press the Options menu button

(or press Enter). This will open the Options dialog box. For each option, you need to type in the name, choose an input device, and a string to be displayed. You can have multiple options, and you can type in any string to be displayed. To make a change, simply press the “Option” button. The screen will go blank for the time chosen. For example, to change the time format, type Time in the Inputs field, select QWERTY from the Keyboard drop-down list, and type in the time format in the same field. This will display the current time in the format you selected. To change the system clock, type Clock in the Inputs field, select 24-Hour from the Keyboard drop-down list, and type in the hour and minute in the same field. Then, select the “+” button to the right of the field to add another field. This will display the time in the format you selected in the two new fields. To change the screensaver delay, type Delay in the Inputs field, select 5 in the Keyboard drop-down list
